RELLER WILLIAMS

09/17/2020

Client: Mikhail Grushin

Inspection Address: 79 Troy Dr, Short Hills NJ 07078

Scope:

Inspect left foundation wall cracks for structural issues.

Inspect the main support beam end crack for structural issues.

Findings:

Left foundation wall -

Inspections of the left foundation wall found it to be partially covered with a finished interior wall. Other areas were exposed in closets. The area covered by the wall had approximately 16" of space, allowing access along the cracked foundation wall.

Inspection of the wall found 3 vertical cracks, all connected with a low horizontal crack. Inspections found evidence of prior patching to the cracks, indicating they were present at the time the interior basement wall was constructed.

Inspections of the cracks found the vertical crack patches to still be intact, indicating little to no movement since patching was applied. The horizontal crack was found to be hairline, indicating slight movement since the original patching / sealing.

Inspections of the cracks in the wall are indicative of damage caused by excessive lateral pressure on the foundation wall, causing inward bowing and cracking. Often these lateral forces are caused by a combination of soil pressure and hydrostatic pressure (when the soil outside the home is saturated with water).

Vertical cracks, when found alone, are usually a sign of differential settlement, but when found with horizontal cracks, typically make up the end of the wall bowing, at the termination of the horizontal crack. Inspections found the 2 end vertical cracks on the left foundation wall also coincide with the ends of the horizontal crack. The 3rd vertical crack was found between the other two, connecting to the horizontal crack.

Main support beam -

Inspections of the main support beam found the end to be sitting in a beam pocket on the foundation wall. Inspections of the crack found the crack to be in the top  $\frac{1}{3}$  of the beam at the very end, approximately where the beam top connects to the wood sill plate on top of the foundation wall.

Inspections of the crack found evidence of concrete patching inside the crack, as well as uniform color of the wood inside and outside the crack, indicating that the crack has been present long-term.

Inspections of the main beam found evidence of steel plates added to each side, starting at the interior finished wall. Typically, beams are reinforced in this manner to allow the removal of a support column to open up a larger space in a basement.

Inspections of the whole main beam were not possible as most of it was covered with drywall. Records may exist at the building department for what modifications were made through prior permits. The capacity or adequacy of the reinforced main beam was beyond the scope of this inspection.

The cracks at the end of the main beam did not appear to be detrimental to the beam's load carrying capacity, as the beam relies mostly on the bottom portion in this area to transfer load into the beam pocket.

Inspections of the kitchen floor in the front left corner of the home found evidence of slight settlement (about 1") of the interior of the home, as compared to the floors around the perimeter. No excessive bounce or visible damage to any finishes was observed to indicate any structural issues. Sagging floors and minor settlement of interior floors is a common occurrence in older homes.

In every home, any sudden changes to the structure should be promptly inspected by a licensed professional.

Recommendations:

It is recommended that the left foundation wall be reinforced to prevent the wall from being further damaged from any future lateral forces.

Common (and often the most economical) methods to reinforce the wall are:

- carbon fiber straps installed on the inside face of the wall (every 5 feet)
- Rebar (steel rods) installed inside the CMU block wall cells and then fill with concrete (every 2 feet)

Reinforcing the wall with rebar from the exterior requires that the CMU blocks are 2-cell blocks and not 3-cell blocks (for adequate room). An exploratory hole may be required to determine if this repair method is even a possibility.

It may be possible to install carbon fiber straps without removing drywall, but plumbing pipes run along the walls may need to be temporarily removed.

Once the wall is reinforced, the horizontal and vertical cracks may still be visible inside the basement, but with the new reinforcement, the wall would be considered structurally sound. The cracks would not need any further repairs but sealing the cracks (with a flexible sealant) would help prevent bugs, dirt, debris, and water from getting inside the cracks.

Estimated costs to reinforce the wall using carbon fiber straps is $6,000. Estimated costs to reinforce the wall using rebar from the exterior is $4,000.

These estimates do not include repairs to landscaping, walkways, painting the exterior of the foundation, drywall patches, relocating wires or pipes, modifying shelving, or any non-structural replated work.

Main support beam -

No repairs are recommended at this time for the main support beam.

This report concludes our investigation at this time pending any further services as required. Additional information on file if needed.
